ACADEMIC AFFAIRS

Albright Fund for Academic Excellence and Innovation By integrating innovative curricula in a supportive learning environment, Albright prepares students to be not only successful problem solvers, effective communicators, and cooperative team members, but also ethical leaders who will make a difference in the world and people’s lives. These funds will support travel and resources for faculty to learn new teaching styles, develop new courses, engage students in scholarly and creative work and more.

Albright Fund for Classroom Innovation and Technology – Many current classrooms are designed in the old lecture-style model. These funds will enhance the learning experience by providing more flexibility through an active-learning environment that comprises new furniture, replacement of carpet, paint, window treatments and lighting.

Albright Fund for the Arts and Humanities – Studies in art, music, theatre, literature, history, foreign languages, philosophy and religion give students strong transferable skills that can be used for most careers. Through these courses, Albrightians build solid analytic, critical thinking, communication, problem solving, research and writing skills that serve them well during their time in the classroom and beyond.

NO BOUNDARIES

Albright Fund for the Sciences – Laboratory-oriented courses in areas such as biology, chemistry, environmental science and physics explore the interdisciplinary nature of a liberal arts education and allow students to address a wide range of contemporary issues beyond the sciences.

Albright Fund for the Social Sciences – Albright's focus on the social sciences (anthropology, economics, education, political science, psychology or sociology) gives students the opportunity to analyze and explore some of the most challenging issues of our time. These courses of study combine service learning and field experience with traditional classroom instruction to provide well-balanced academic programs.

Albright Fund for the Library – A college library provides the foundation for research and study for all disciplines taught at the college. Contributions to the library, which support a variety of collections, services and research support, foster academic excellence and intellectual discovery within our liberal arts community.
